

Organization Membership Information

The Injury Free Coalition for Kids welcomes non-hospital based institutions, associations, government agencies, organizations and foundations with a vested interest in preventing injuries to children to submit applications for membership. This is in contrast to single persons who are eligible to apply as individuals.

An Institutional Membership is a financial commitment to support the work of the Injury Free Coalition for Kids and its sites. Levels of commitment are addressed on the following page.

Injury Free is a national injury prevention program focused on reducing and preventing injuries to children through a hospital-based, research driven model, implemented in partnership with coalitions of community stakeholders. Injury Free programs are based in the Nation's trauma centers and hospitals. The National Program Office (NPO) assists with program development, evaluation, research, finances, and media coverage. The NPO is located in the Columbia Center for Injury Science and Prevention in the Mailman School of Public Health of Columbia University in New York. Work of the Coalition takes place under the guidance of a board made up of Coalition members. All sites abide by a set of bylaws developed by the board and approved by the membership at large, and all Injury Free programs and interventions established by sites follow the ABCs of Injury Prevention listed below.

- A -- Analyze the data
- B -- Build a coalition of community members and stakeholders
- C -- Communicate the injury problem to the community
- D -- Develop and carry out an intervention
- E -- Evaluate to see the effectiveness of the program

Injury Free Sites address specific prevention programs that address local challenges in a multifaceted, comprehensive manner to reduce the most prevalent and severe childhood injuries in their communities; however, using the ABCs of Injury Prevention developed by the Coalition institutionalizes proven methodology.
